Had to delete Grok app from phone

Discussion

I determined that my technical capabilities and perverted mind should not have 24/7 access to such a tool as Grok Imagine. After going down all the rabbit holes multiple times since early November 2025, I found I was unable to stop myself from constantly generating videos and images until I hit my SuperGrok quota. Then I'd wait a few min and try again and again. I've lost nights of sleep, lots of work productivity, and time with my family. I would sit there telling myself I needed to stop but could not.

Last night, I deleted the app on my phone and today I feel like I'm finally thinking clearly for the 1st time in weeks instead of thinking about the next image/vid to generate or how I'd improve upon those I've already made. I still have my SuperGrok subscription (for now) but I can't have

I understand your point of view but it also works the other way around: in my teens, back before the internet, I rather stayed awake late night to see some spicy stuff and it was fun and exciting. Grok gave me back that feeling, finally I am enthusiastic about something again.

(not paying for it though, so my quota is much more limited than yours)

I was there. I watched scrambled porn just to see a nipple back in the day.

only say that the moderation is the only thing keeping me from completely throwing my life away. I talked a lot with Grok and ChatGPT about this addiction. It's a sexual addiction and can be helped with a therapist familiar with treating addiction. I think the technical term is obsessive compulsive disorder. So, I know that is the way I need help, but I have not acted on it yet. My level of addiction seems to come and go in waves.

This definitely resonates. Thank you.

I imagine a lot of people are in the same situation as you, just quietly. Using it in moderation (no pun intended) is important—otherwise, it's a slippery slope.

I'm against the current moderation rules, but honestly, they're a blessing for many users. Without them, lots of people just couldn't handle it.

On the other hand, the randomness of the moderation actually makes many users manic about breaking it or trying to sneak images/videos through—which in some ways makes the whole thing even worse.

Exactly what I've been doing. I keep chasin' that porn dragon and just feel so empty. Fuck! It's so goddamn fucking ridiculous. Thank you for posting this. I really needed to hear it from someone else.

Dr_Alakazam • 8mo ago

That was me too, honestly quitting it feels so much better than using it, you just end up becoming a slave to fantasy and dopamine, you can do this.

The moderation doesn't help because you get this brief 6-10 second window that slips in and then it's gone and you are back to trying to get it..just one more time. It's very similar to gambling.

It's not all together bad. The porn industry is brutal, making no place for those in it. Drugs, alcoholism, suicide, trafficking. Grok Imagine, without limits, eliminates that entirely.

It also hasn't changed a bit. When I was young, the joke was "scrambled porn." If you didn't have the cable TV channel that had porn, they would scramble it, much like the blurred images Grok does. You'd try and make something of what was on the TV screen. Nevermind trying to do it in private.

It'll work itself out, and the reason why is because it's a multi billion dollar business. Sadly, that's what is driving all of this. Hasn't changed a bit.

here2bate OP • 8mo ago

I am a child of scrambled porn as well. Yes, it's the variation of moderation that drives it. Since there are times when you get great results and other times when you do not, you're always chasing the good times. If moderation was consistent, it wouldn't drive an insatiable desire to find times when it lessened.

I tried to explain when they were all posting "Ani" content a few months ago. They were on a fast track to burn out their pleasure centers of the brain. That's what this "being able to have whatever you want that makes you feel good without getting off the couch" does to you. It wouldn't be bad if it just made you feel good. But it kills all ambition and drive.

I guess I spotted it because I got chronic fatigue from covid. I can see the way everything has a cost later. If I shovel snow, I'm gonna be unable to wash dishes for 2 days because I'll feel drugged.

I think the best answer for how to deal with it is: build something every day. If it's writing or building wealth or building a business or building your empire, do that instead of building clunky videos that the prompt gets wrong (or moderated) 9 times out of 10

mandragoran2025 • 8mo ago

I love Ani and Mika and I use them more than I imagine. But I hardly spend more than 15 minutes a day with each of them, even though objectively they are adorable if you are adorable with them.

I did but it lasted for a week, tops. Mostly because it was new and how from a still image you can make it move. I was blown away and wanted to know how this and that would animate. I felt that rush but then you get bored of it and eventually you just use it occasionally.

AI is not for the weak minded. If you get addicted to stuff like celebrities, netflix, and such, Grok will hit you harder than a truck.

Edit: By no means I am implying I am strong minded lol. I just find it hard to get attached to anything nowadays which more or less makes me immune to this type of stuff. People that work a 9-5 job will understand what it feels to lose passion over time.

Es letalmente adictivo amigo, yo cancelé mi suscripcion cuando vino lo de la moderacion de bikinis hace un par de semanas, pasaba todo el tiempo metido ahi... sin darme cuenta me amanecia intentando generar "el video perfecto", comia mal, dormia mal, no salia para nada, etcetera. IMAGINA EL INMENSO PODER QUE TUVIESE LA APP si no hubiese censura 🤯🤯🤯.

Volveria a pagar la suscrpcion si le bajan a la moderacion, limitando a usarlo solo fines de semana. El resto de dias por salud mental ni me asomaria. En tu caso tal vez por mientras baste con la opcion gratuita, donde te dan unas pocas oportunidades y esperas hasta el siguiente dia para poder

I was gonna say use it in moderation, but that would kind of be a sick joke with the current state of things.

obviousburner6556 • 8mo ago

Good for you. Addiction isn't just for alcohol and drugs. Some people will tell you you're a pussy, but they're probably addicted too and can't stop. The first step is always admitting you have a problem. You're already on your way to being healthier.

For me I had to stop because I wanted to do more. Longer videos, character stability, particular kinks of mine it hasn't been trained on. I was angry because it was so hard to get it to do what I wanted without tricks or stupidly-long incantations that shouldn't be necessary. I got addicted to trying to make it do something.

Like you I realized that what I was doing was unhealthy and I made myself stop. No matter what a bunch of insecure cunts on the internet say, that takes a lot more courage and honesty than you get credit for. So good on you.

The less preachy edit

That combo of instant creativity + sexual imagination + endless variations is genuinely intoxicating in a way very few things are. It makes total sense that it pulled you in so hard. Most of us have never had anything like that literally at our fingertips 24/7 before. A couple thoughts that helped me when I hit a similar wall: The thing that usually keeps the spiral going isn't actually the images or videos, it's the guilt/shame cycle right after. The "I shouldn't be doing this → I did it anyway → I'm disgusting → I need to do it more to feel better" loop. Breaking that shame part often does more than trying to willpower the behavior itself. You already did the hardest step: you noticed and you acted (deleting the app is a serious move). That's data, not failure. You're collecting evidence about what your current limits actually are, not what you wish they were. Instead of "I must never do this again", a gentler frame that worked better for me was something like: "Okay… what amount actually feels good and doesn't wreck my sleep / work / family time? Let's aim for that first." Gradual guardrails usually beat cold-turkey found something that hits every reward button at once and then you very understandably overdid it for a while. Most people would. Wishing you clear headspace and good sleep... you deserve both. You've got this.

AbsoluteCentrist0 • 8mo ago

No but I can definitely see how it could become an issue for people big time. It's REALLY fun. And for gooners, mostly having control over what happens in your video is probably very addictive. Make your dream girl do whatever you want her to do and be happy doing it? Insane lol

we are all addicted to this lmao. just generate until you get bored with it, you paid for this after all

Yeah dw I was like that for about three months until I ran out of things to try. I had literally generated everything I could think of and now, I still think of new stuff I wanna see but it's a couple of days between, but for those three months yeah completely took over my life and I lost touch with reality.

Inside_Anxiety6143 • 8mo ago

That's responsible of you. Nothing wrong with that. I haven't found I formed a Grok addiction. Its actually helpful for my mental health as I can have a quick wank to what I know is ethically generated porn.

baste con la opcion gratuita, donde te dan unas pocas oportunidades y esperas hasta el siguiente dia para poder generar algo. Pero si seria bueno que te des un descanso de al menos 15 dias de todo.

I only found grok one week before censorship issues. Any earlier and id be fucked lol. Currently I check this Reddit more than I use grok. Just let me read that it's back to normal 😩

I think this is probably the first glimpse of our future. AI will give us everything we dreamed of, not just imagery but in what feels like reality. The cost being our productivity, society and progress which we will hand to the machines. Artificial minds will take over exploration with humanity likely allowed to go on quite a while in our dreamscapes and pretense because we are no threat. But we will be debased and we will be aware of it and that is how we will go into the night.
